Extra Credit

Roy and I mostly communicated through voice call this week! Although we totaled only about 50 text messages - not including the ones where I was checking in on him or vice versa - relating to the project this week, we did have an over two-hour long conversation over Discord voice chat about it!

Roy has always been amazing about being self sufficient and continually banging his head against the wall, if you will, until he got the right answer. However, he did spend quite a while stuck on a few select queries before we started a call. I think he felt like he shouldn't bother me or something, but I reminded him, as his partner and friend, that I signed up to be his biggest advocate in this class and that I learn a lot from him too!

Anyways, the main topics of discussion this week were about some of the more advanced queries and regular expressions. The main source of problem was that Roy couldn't really visualize how nested select statements work or how to do it - which was a big problem since a lot of queries this week could be/are solved using them - but I guided him on their usage through an example. However, I could tell that things started rolling smoothly once he nailed that! I also helped him with fixing two of his RegExs which were returning wrong things.

Roy was very thankful for my help saying things such as 'you saved me' and such, but each time I told him that it was no problem! Like stated earlier in this paper, I told him that I signed up, as his partner and dear friend, to be his biggest advocate in this class and that I'd help him again without hesitation! Anyways, I'm sure we're both looking forward to the beautiful phases to come! Cheers!